

Innovative Procurement for Abandoned Mine Reclamation

Difficult timeframes, budgets and workloads have led facility and infrastructure owners across the U.S. and Canada to turn to Indefinite Quantity Construction Contracts (IQCC), such as Job Order Contracting, as an innovative method to procure repair, alteration and reclamation projects at competitively-bid prices.

Available locally through cooperative purchasing networks, IQCC enables facility and infrastructure owners to competitively procure affordable, quality construction and have work begin in days. Instead of coping with construction delays, IQCC empowers administrators to complete repair, alteration and reclamation projects before conditions worsen or time runs out.

IQCC is a proven procurement technique that enables facility and infrastructure owners to accomplish a large number of small and medium-sized projects with a single, competitively-bid contract based on a set of fully customized, pre-priced construction tasks. IQCC saves significant time in getting work procured and completed, and can often save considerable expense to stretch budgets further through the benefit of volume pricing.

Attendees will be able to understand what IQCC is and how it has worked for abandoned mine reclamation projects in Utah, how it can be applied other reclamation projects throughout the nation, and how IQCC is immediately available through regional and national cooperative purchasing networks.

By attending this session, participants will be able to: Assess viability of IQCC as a method to quickly perform abandoned mine reclamation projects.

By attending this session, participants will be able to: Employ best practices in order to understand how an IQCC program can deliver high quality, cost efficient solutions.

By attending this session, participants will be able to: Engage with thought leaders in the IQCC industry to discuss first/next steps to implement or test IQCC in their organization.
